entire image meeting the constraints specified in the algorithm, the stored images are retrieved by providing the down sampled version of the partitioned input image. During the retrieval of the complete image, the trained network is fed with down sampled version (test image) of the partitioned images one after the other.

for the efficient storage and image retrieval systems. In the early days in 1970s the image retrieval was text based. Due to the complexity in the naming convention and also the manual effort behind annotating the images, this method lead to the development of content based image retrieval systems in early 1980s.
