Check the status bar at the bottom of the screen. If Outlook is performing some operation on hundreds or thousands of messages at once, it might appear to be stuck. Give Outlook a few minutes to finish the process and it should start to work again. If Outlook isn't working on a large or long process, move on to the next step.

On the next screen, highlight "Microsoft Outlook," then select "End Program." Confirm your choice on the next screen. If this does not work, continue to Step 3. Step. Click "Start," then choose to restart or shut down your computer. When the shut down procedure begins, it will close out all programs, frozen or not.

Outlook is not extremely efficient with PST file space. When something is erased, it is left for a long time before it is actually erased from PST file. To fix this, select every PST file (for the most part called Outlook or Personal Folders), right click on it and choose Data File Properties >> Advanced >>Compact Now.
